PREFATORY NOTE.

THE contents of this booklet were originally communicated to the Pennsylvania-German Society, at its Annual Meeting held at Ephrata, Pa., in October, of 1899. The substance of the address of the author on that occasion, on "The Capability of the Pennsylvania-German for Poetic Expression," in illustration of which a number of the poems were read, is given in the introductory essay. With one exception the poems have never been printed before. They appear here for the first time, and are published according to a special resolution of the Executive Committee, and as one of the official publications of the Pennsylvania-German Society.

INTRODUCTION.

THE CAPABILITY OF THE PENNSYLVANIA-GERMAN FOR POETIC EXPRESSION.

THE verses which follow were written at odd moments in an endeavor to show that the Pennsylvania-German as such is not incapable of poetic sentiment and of being stirred by poetic emotions, and that the dialect he habitually speaks is not inadequate to express those emotions and sentiments, nor to lend itself to all the usual forms of versification, with all its requirements of metre, rhythm, and rhyme.

Until quite recent times the current conception of the Pennsylvania-German has been that he is a very commonplace, somewhat dull, slow and stolid plodder, albeit honest and thorough in all he does; a thorough materialist, concerned exclusively with material occupations for material ends. Thanks to the labors of the Pennsylvania-German Society this erroneous notion is being pretty well dissipated. His rightful place in the political, economic, social, educational and religious history of the state and country, as well as in its agricultural development, is being more and more fully recognized. But even yet this recognition is only qualifiedly given, is very partial. Outside of religion and education his achievements have been mainly of a utilitarian character. It is implied, if not actually said, that he knows little or nothing of the world of higher thought and finer feeling. In other words, he is still considered as essentially less spiritual, coarser, and on a lower plane of being than the descendants of the early settlers of other nationalities than the German. At all events, to connect the deeper emotions of the heart, and finer sentiments of the soul, with the Pennsylvania-German as he is commonly thought of, is somewhat incongruous, and is apt to provoke an incredulous smile, if not a sneer.

Nor is it mere ill-nature, or altogether blind prejudice, on the part of our friends that denies us all poetic feeling and expression. There is some ground for it, and, in part at least, we have ourselves to blame for it.

First of all, what have we Pennsylvania-Germans done to disabuse the minds of our friends of their error? If we except most of the poetry of Harbaugh, the one or two little poems that Rondthaler wrote, and some of that of Lee Grumbine, with perhaps a few scattered verses by others, is it not true that all the metrical composition thus far produced in the Pennsylvania-German dialect has not been real poetry at all, but only attempts to arouse laughter at the expense either of the Pennsylvania-German himself or of the strange-sounding dialect? Sometimes the attempts have been genuinely humorous, oftener than not they have been coarse and in questionable taste. The same is true of too much of the newspaper-writing in the dialect. Nearly all that has been done, in prose or verse, has been broadly humorous, with no attempt at anything else, no higher ambition or aim than to make the reader or hearer laugh. From this the world has formed its judgment of us and of our speech. Can we blame it for its verdict?

But, again, the Pennsylvania-German is not to be censured too severely for having confined himself thus almost exclusively to humor in his writings. Let us remember that he was from the beginning a hard worker. The early settlers and makers of this commonwealth were kept exceedingly busy in their struggle for bare existence. Their daily lives were full of hardships, disappointments, suffering, full of tragedy and pathos all the time. When they did have leisure to write, or even in their social converse, what they needed was not the recital of the same experiences and feelings which they were constantly having, but a change, diversion, amusement, something to take their minds off the too great seriousness of their life. They naturally, necessarily, turned to humor to lighten their lot.

As a matter of fact, the Pennsylvania-German is rather more serious habitually than those of most other nationalities. But it is a fact, too, that he is unusually undemonstrative. He certainly does not "carry his heart on his sleeve." He hides his deeper feelings. Admiration, enthusiasm, hope and fear, joy and grief, love, hate, aspiration and despair, all the most delicate sentiments born of the conjugal and filial relations—these are carefully repressed before the stranger, and the outsider is allowed to see no signs of them. Only in the sacredness of the home, the bosom of the family, or the inner circle of the most intimate companionship, is their manifestation ever permitted. But that they all exist there, as strong, and rich and full as in any human breast, he who has ever been privileged to enter into the inner life of the Pennsylvania-German need not be told. I have myself witnessed scenes of the most touching tenderness, such as the stranger would be surprised at, when a son or daughter bade farewell to their childhood's home; of tragic sorrow at the grave of a child or wife; and of the most beautiful, heroically self-sacrificing devotion on the part of a husband for the wife of his bosom become a lifelong invalid. I know that, among the uncultured rustics as much as among the highly educated, their home-life is often characterized by habitual gentleness, words and deeds of thoughtful affection, loving consideration, and the display of all the finest sensibilities. The lover is as fond in his wooing, and as full of pure sentiment, as anywhere else in the world. The rough mountaineer has as keen and correct a sense of the beautiful in nature, and shows it in the selection of the site for his humble cabin, in his open admiration of the golden sunset, and in the cultivation of his little plot of flower garden, as though he had studied art all his lifetime. And why should this not be so? These are qualities that have been inherited from his German forefathers, just as much as his tireless industry and his sterling honesty. And are they not the elemental qualities that must enter into every poetic soul whatever else may be present or wanting there? Where they are found the capabilities of true poetry cannot be absent.

Nor will those who are at all acquainted with his folklore be inclined to deny him great imaginative power. This, too, however, he is not in the habit of exploiting in public. He reserves its display for his intimates, for those who know him well enough not to suspect him of being sentimental or weakly effeminate, the one thing of which he seems to be morbidly afraid. This alone goes far to account for the public's knowing so little of the Pennsylvania-German's poetic capabilities.

Finally, as has before been intimated, the early settlers and their immediate descendants were too busy,

“ Busy with hewing and building, with garden plot and with merestead, Busy with breaking the glebe, and mowing the grass in the meadows,” to have either time or inclination for writing poetry. And when in later years they did attain to a position which gave them more leisure, and they perhaps would have felt more disposed to court the muse, they found that their mother-tongue, the words in which they thought and spoke, was not a written language. And, moreover, if one did succeed in writing it, the number of those who could read it was discouragingly small. So that, if he would reach the real public, he must think and write in some other than the Pennsylvania-German tongue.

This is not saying by any means, however, that his dialect is lacking in richness of vocabulary, flexibility, or expressiveness. Let me not be so misunderstood. As a rule, dialects are if anything richer and more expressive than the languages from which they are derived; and the Pennsylvania-German is no exception to this. There is no reason why it should be. So far as that is concerned, it is fully the equal of the Yankee dialect which gave us Lowell's Biglow Papers, or the Negro patois of “ Uncle Remus ” and Paul Lawrence Dunbar, or the Hoosier dialect of James Whitcomb Riley. It is even richer than these, because it has freely drawn from the vocabularies of two languages, and not only from one as have these. But precisely in this, that it has appropriated and freely assimilated idioms and words from both the German and the English, lies the reason why it has found no place in the literature of either. The German cannot read it because of its English affiliations. The English finds it a strange tongue because it is so largely composed of German. It is a foreign dialect to both alike. Its very fullness and richness, therefore, and not its poverty or meagreness, have been a main cause of its having found so few authors, and fewer poets, to use it for the expression of their thoughts and feelings. No poet wants to write for himself alone, least of all a Pennsylvania-German, who is nothing if not practical, whether in cultivating the arts or the earth.

Taking all these things into consideration, the conclusion I finally arrived at was that the Pennsylvania-German has inherited, from the same ancestry that has produced a Lessing, Goethe, Schiller, Heine, and Rückert, a temperament that is at least not in any sense unpoetic; but that the circumstances attending his emigration to this country, and settlement and development of this state, have caused him to refrain from any published expression of the same, have kept his muse timid and shy, and studiously hidden from public view.

To satisfy myself that this conclusion was correct, and that there is no inherent lack of capability for poetic expression in the Pennsylvania-German, I essayed the composition of the several poems that follow, on a variety of subjects and in a number of different kinds of versification. If occasional imperfections of rhyme are noticed, it must be remembered that the rules governing rhyme are not nearly as rigorous in German poetry as in English, especially the English of more recent years.

Unnich 'em Aldé Keshdè Bazm was written in a reminiscent mood, with a note of sadness running through it, and the echo of a childish romance suggested. The dialect lends itself readily to this style; it is smoothly rhythmic; and rhyme and metre are simple. The same is true of the narrative verses of An der Fair, where the humorous element is uppermost, and however expressed, the description of subjective and objective events is at least true to nature. Description, coupled with religious feeling, are attempted in En Herrnhodter Oshder Margé, and religious meditation in Der Aldé Kärch-hof uf 'em Bärge. In a different style of verse and mood the tragically pathetic incident of Der Shbohdé Shool Boo is related. Fire! describes an incident in a country village that will appeal to many.

The sonnet is a form of verse that perhaps more than any other tests the capabilities of the dialect, requiring, as it does, delicacy of touch and great flexibility of language. So far as I know it had never before been attempted in Pennsylvania-German, until I tried it in Im Bush vann's Shnayd and Vann der Wind mohl ivver dee Shdubblé blohsdt. Unser Henny tells how a country lad left home to go to the city, grew to manhood there, and, returning on a visit, tried to impress his former neighbors and companions with his superior city ways;—and also how the latter felt about it. Until Mr. Lee L. Grumbine's excellent poem on Der Alt' Dengel Shtock appeared, which it did after I had written Dee Amshel, I had never seen an attempt in the dialect of onomatopoeic verse. It also is a rather severe test of the capabilities of the language. A different metre was used for Der Koo Shdohr, which bases some moralizing remarks on the well known habit of the cow blackbird, or cow bunting, to lay its eggs in another bird's nest. The last poem of the collection En Leychd (A Funeral), is after the manner of the impressionistic school of art, somewhat vaguely allusive, and suggestive of a hidden tragedy. The snow and storm that prevail at the burial of the young girl are but trifles compared with the storm of remorseful memories that arise in the breast of the young man as he witnesses the burial, and silently offers up a prayer for pardon for her sins and for his. The sentiment suggested the style of verse.

I must yet be permitted a word about the spelling of the dialect. I confess that I found this almost the most difficult part of the entire undertaking. Should I spell the words strictly phonetically? This I finally determined to do. But according to which, the German or the English sounds of the alphabet, should I do it? I found that the main difficulty was not to spell according to both promiscuously. This has been the mistake made by nearly all who have written in our dialect, with the result that they have made the reading of their writings doubly difficult. I discovered that there is an absolute lack of uniformity of spelling in most if not all Pennsylvania-German writings; and it impressed on me the crying need of some fixed standard of orthography. We ought to have it, and that right soon. I chose, arbitrarily I confess, to spell according to the English sounds of the letters, and have tried to be consistent in this throughout. In how far I have succeeded in this, as well as in showing that the Pennsylvania-German has some capability for poetic expression, must be left to the judgment of the reader. If I have at least opened a new field for study and endeavor, my experiment shall not have been altogether in vain.

UNSER HENNY.

OO hushd doch als " unser Henny " g'kennd,
Em aldé Tshon sei Boo?
En fedder, glayner, bawrfeessicher Kärll,
Was als g'shbrungé is grawd vee en Koo.

Am Dawg hut er alsfart seim Dawdy sei Kee

In dee grawssiche Alleys g'heed;
Dee Milch hut em Tshon sei Fraw ferkawfd,—
Meer hen als unsry Milch dort g'reed.

Ivveraveyl hut der Henny awe's shoomaché g'lärnd,
Ovver's Harn-blohsé var'm feel leever!
En aldes B-flat Harn hut er g'haddé,
Uf dem hut er g'blohsé vee lenger vee leever.

Dem Tshon hut's ovver märkvärdich fertzärnd:
" Ich bin dei Gedoodel bal' satt!
Hush'd g'hehrd, ehleennicher Bull-tarry doo?
Vann d'net shaffé vid machshd dich fart!"

Bal' nohch selm is der Henny awe gongé,—
Den Summer vohr's finf Yohr;—

As dee Staydge is g'fohré naus
Bis an em Tshon sei Shoomacher Shop,
Un dart tshumpd en finer Tshendleman raus.

Sell hut uns all vunnerfitzich g'machd;—
Vär kennend seller Tshendleman sei?
Der Tshon hut nix fun Koombany g'sawd.
Yushd vohrd! Ferleychd kummt er awe net rei.

Er goockd as vee en rechter Shbohrd;
 Mer sayn'd er kummt fun der Shdodt!
 En Shdovepipe hut er uf em Kup,
 So sheinich as vee der Porrer hut.

Grulliche Hohr, un en g'vicksder Musdache,
 Un en Halsduch rohd un bloh;
 Hellé Hussé, un en schwartzer Ruck,
 Un be'gosh, er hut gaylé Henshing oh'!

En Shteckly hut er in ayner Hand,
 Un en Drävelling-bäg in der onner.
 Er goockd now shmehr, un no Mishdake!
 Un grawd in dee Shop-deer kummt er runner!

“Vell, Fawther,” sechd er tzum aldé Tshon;
 “Dontcher know your Harry yet?”
 Mit sellem raycht er eem dee Hand.—
 Ich glawb der Tshon ovver kennend en net.

Mid dem kummt dee Kärline in der Shop,
 Un sehnd den Shbohrd dort shtay.
 See gebd en Grish, un falld um sei Hals:
 “Ei Tshon, kennshd unser Henny net may?”

Bei der Tzeid bin ich un der Bill
 On der hinnere Deer naus g'shneekd.
 “Dunner-vedder” secht er tzu meer,
 “Voo hut der Henny den Shdyle her g'rickt?”

Noh sin mer nivver im Frank sei S'loon,
 Doch vohré mer net lang dort,

 As vehr er Millioné vehrd;
 Noh secht er: “Tshendlemen, I shtand dreet!”
 Un glei sin all unser Glessen ausg'lehrd.

Un laygd dart sei Oy nei as het er's beshd Recht.

Hut der Aygner fum Neshd,—un er grickd vennich Ruh!

Ovver's ärghsdé kummd vonn der yung Shdohr

Iss grohs värré un fett.

Dennoh shemmd er sich net

'Dee ann'ré glay Feggel tzu growdé, un gohr

Aus'm Neshd see tzu schmeissé, vee'n Reyver un Deeb.

'Es machd eem nix aus as see shdervé fun Hunger un Nohdt,— Kennshd net Leyd as yushd soh meen sin?

See doon nix uf der Veldt,
